Portland, Nov. 22.-Hopgrowers and dealers are figuring this year on the average value of hops in Oregon, in order to uscertain what profit there is in the business in a given term of years.

"No product of the Northwest varies so widely in value," one old-time dealer said today, "and the very tow price of this year will be followed by very high prices next."

"In 1893 the average price of hops in Portland was 16c a pound; in 1894 9c; in 1895, 5e; in 1896, 7e; in 1897, 6e; in 1898, 16c; in 1899, 5c; in 1900, 11c; in 1904, 30c; and thi year the average is about 9c.

"This gives an average of 14c a pound. The cost of raising the hops and getting them ready for sale is about be; and [the average return thus nets the producer 5c per pound. This shows that the hopraiser who can stay with the business, year after year, can do better than by raising other product, although there is danger in off year of going broke, because the hops do not bring the cost of production. Those who have contracted their hops at 15c therefore obtain more than those who sell with the rise and fall of market values, year after year."
